Subject: participant fee disclosure project

My husband works at a fortune 500 company. Not only does his current 401(k) website not disclose fees, it does not disclose the trustee, or administrator or current information regarding what the funds own. the most recent fee schedule is as of 6/2006 for one of the funds. the most recent top 10 investment schedule is dated 6/30/2007. The international fund does not tell you what countries they invest in. So, I am assuming if they are not providing accurate information regarding the composition of the funds, then it is even worse regarding fees. We are at wits end trying to figure out in an intelligent matter what funds to invest in to diversify vis a vis our IRA's and other investments.

How can a baby boomer begin to have proper asset allocation and keep expenses down if their 401(K) provider does not provide this information?

It is mandatory that 401(k)s provide at least as much information that mutual funds provide. Most of the middle class americans savings are only in their 401(K)s. As much as we may say, no regulation, corporations will act irresponsibly if there is no regulation against it!!!!
