General Comment

I have been treating people with mental health and addiction problems since 1994 with results that are so positive that starting in 2001 my research has been published in leading journals. These include the Journal of Pain, Clinical Neuropsychiatry, Brain Injury, and The Journal of Head Trauma Rehabilitation. Current research using Neurofeedback for PTSD with our Soldiers serving in Iraq and Afghanistan has led to invitations from Walter Reed Army Medical Center, and the Force Health Prevention Conference to present the current data. The time is long past due for Neurofeedback to be recognized as one of the effective treatments for mental health problems.
