General Comment

Coverage of contraceptive measures for women should still be a requirement for religious organizations to provide. Here, religious conservatives are attempting to pit Religious Rights vs Women's Rights; large groups vs the individual. Even though a religion may have strict and respectable morals regarding sexuality, you must account for individuals in those groups that do not necessarily associate themselves with a particular religion 100%. Regardless if it is an issue of awry members or simply planned parenthood, the personal options should still be available for women. An unplanned pregnancy is a very serious matter, whether religious or not, that can be avoided so long as the means are there.
