- Office of the Solicitor (SOL)
- Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC)
- National Labor Relations Board (NLRB)

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Preventing Retaliation is a Win-Win for Businesses, Workers, and Consumers

Preventing retaliation is a win-win because it means:

- Abiding by the law
- Proactively resolving disputes in the workplace
- Protecting workers
- Encouraging a positive workplace culture
- Improving employee satisfaction and engagement
- Protecting consumers/the public
- Avoiding costly penalties and bad publicity

A Note on the Content of This Webinar

- The recommendations and best practices shared in this presentation are general in nature. These best practices are not mandatory for employers and do not interpret or create legal obligations. Many of the recommendations presented in this presentation are derived from the recommendations crafted by the Whistleblower Protection Advisory Committee.
- The suggestions presented in this webinar are scalable. You may consider as you adapt and implement the suggested practices:
 - The size of the workplace
 - The type of work that employees are doing
 - The makeup of the workforce

Compliance Programs & Substantive Law

- Any compliance program or policies on retaliation will be closely intertwined with compliance with the substantive law at issue.
- Best practices include acting on worker concerns and properly addressing them as part of an employer's overall operations system.
- Employers may also consider establishing and/or reinvigorating labor-management occupational health and safety committees with full union participation and anti-retaliation protections.

Audits

Addressing Retaliation: System for Receiving and Responding to Reports of Retaliation

Employers may want to consider:

- Developing independent reporting channels
- Keeping reports confidential
- Investigating retaliation

Addressing Retaliation: Remedies for Employees Who Have Experienced Retaliation

Employers are encouraged to consider how to make employees whole. This may include:

- Reinstating the employee if they have been fired
- Paying lost wages owed and other compensatory damages to the affected employee(s)
- Firing a manager who has not followed the organization's policies on retaliation
- Promoting a worker who missed out on a promotion due to retaliation

Best Practices When Being Investigated for Retaliation

- Maintain and provide all requested information
- Avoid witness interference
- Before communicating with non-managerial employees about the investigation, discuss it with the investigators
