General Comment

As a retail investor and a tax payer, I am in support of this. For far too long, white collar crime has been a joke to our judicial system. The financial sector sometimes will openly admit to the fraud they commit and it has become a source of comedy to them, when the same type of fraud would land a person like myself in prison. There needs to be consequences to individuals who take moral and financial risks with other peoples money. The fact that they can sign some papers and walk away from the situation (just to do it again) is disgusting by and a disgrace on our country. I'd prefer to pay more in taxes knowing that the greed of the financial sector is kept in check for the benefit of us all, and not just their pocketbook.
