Yesterday you were talking about the IH reports and how they would 'use their industry work experience in doing their job.'

Over the 16 years I have been doing advocacy work as an A/R, I have read the CV's or bios on some IH people used by DOL and found very few have ever had a relevant job and their only credentials were educational. My own background for decades before doing this was in the electronics instrumentation industry as a high tech entrepreneur and visiting thousands clients in all the basic industries, metals, plastics, fibers, petrochem, aerospace, et al, so I have substantive knowledge of toxins in the workplace.

It might be within the scope of your work to suggest that DOL better screen the IH's they contract with.
